Seaports handled trade valued at $336 billion in 2010, including over 14 million twenty-foot equivalent units (TEUs) of containerized cargo

Interstate, Highways, and Local Roads make up over 53,400 road miles, some averaging over 25,000 trucks per day, that carry a mix of local, domestic trade, and international cargoes and provide critical "last mile" connections to ports, airports, manufacturing facilities, intermodal terminals, warehouses, and distribution centers

Railroads serving the region include two Class I railroads (Burlington Northern Santa Fe Railway and Union Pacific), that carry international and domestic cargo to and from distant parts of the country, multiple major intermodal terminals and railyards, and Class III railroads (Pacific Harbor Line, Los Angeles Junction Railway, and the Ventura County Railway) serving local and regional origins and destinations

Air Cargo Facilities at regional airports handled over $78 billion in air cargo in 2010, much of it moving through the regional intermodal system upon arrival

Manufacturing Jobs declined over 31% between 2001 and 2011, with just under 687,300 jobs recorded in 2011, the region remains the top ranked manufacturing center in the nation; almost 40% or 186,600 jobs more than the second ranked place of New York Consolidated Statistical Area
